

2010 Summer Seminar Opportunity

The Power of Race in American Religion

June 21 – July 9, 2010, Calvin College, Grand Rapids, MI

Dr. Michael Emerson, Rice University

Race and religion are intimately linked to one another in the United States.

In this three-week seminar, we closely examine these connections and their implications for social and religious life, analyze different alternatives in light of faith traditions, and consider the benefits and costs of different approaches for different groups, all in an attempt to bring clarity to these issues and outline avenues for research and teaching. To that end we also focus on theoretical views of religion, race, ethnicity, and immigration. Participants work on their own race and religion studies during the seminar, and will receive guided feedback in a supportive environment.

Application deadline is January 15, 2010

For more information and application requirements, visit www.calvin.edu/scs

Other Seminars @ Calvin 2010 Programs of Interest:

Faith and Globalization, directed by Dr. Miroslav Volf, Yale (July 12-23)

Religion, War, and the Meaning of America, directed by Dr. Harry Stout, Yale (June 28-July 16)